The Growing Concern of Nepalese Involvement in the Russian Army for the Ukraine War

Nepal's government has come under scrutiny for its lack of accountability over diplomatic matters, leading to a series of far-reaching impacts. Among the pressing issues currently facing the nation are the unresolved diplomatic concerns between the Russians and Nepalese. In the backdrop of Russia's invasion in Ukraine, the Nepalese government's stance has been questioned, especially in light of the growing involvement of Nepalese individuals in the Russian Army.

1. The Himalayan Times

2. The Kathmandu Post

3. Online Khabarhub

4. Online Khabarhub

5. Online Khabarhub

6. Online Khabarhub

The situation calls for urgent attention from Nepalese authorities to safeguard the nation's borders. The precise number of Nepalese individuals recruited into the Russian Army remains uncertain. Nonetheless, these developments have raised significant concerns about the well-being of its workforce, both at home and abroad. The implications of this issue extend beyond individual decisions, potentially straining Nepal's bilateral relations with its friendly nations.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs also made a statement on Tuesday urging Nepali citizens not to go to war-torn countries for security-related work. The non-aggression pact signed between Nepal, the United Kingdom, and India explicitly states that Nepali citizens are only allowed to serve in the armies of India and Britain. The implications of this issue extend beyond individual decisions, potentially straining Nepal's bilateral relations with its friendly nations.

The precise number of Nepalese individuals recruited into the Russian Army remains uncertain. Nonetheless, these developments have raised significant concerns about the well-being of its workforce, both at home and abroad. The implications of this issue extend beyond individual decisions, potentially straining Nepal's bilateral relations with its friendly nations.